The report of the Romanian Agency and Preventing Team of East European Institute of the Ministry of Romanian Health, was written by the means and with the approval of Ministry of Romanian Health and Romanian Agency and Preventing Team of East European Institute of the Ministry of Romanian Health.

In order to elaborate this report, The Ministry of Romanian Health and Romanian Agency and Preventing Team of East European Institute of the Ministry of Romanian Health, made a national survey among 2000 people from all areas of Romania in order to better understand the social and economic consequences of the criminal acts of violence and to make recommendations for preventing and fighting violence. The survey was conducted in the period of 1st of January to 31st of December 2002. The survey was conducted among adults aged 18 to 65 years old, who were randomly selected from the population of Romania. The survey included questions about the occurrence of violence in the family, the workplace, and the community. The results showed that violence is a serious problem in Romania, with 20% of the respondents reporting having been victims of violence in the past year.

The report was written by the means and with the approval of Ministry of Romanian Health and Romanian Agency and Preventing Team of East European Institute of the Ministry of Romanian Health. The report is part of WHO's public aim: "Say NO to violence. Say it efficiently and systematically." The report includes a summary of the main findings, a detailed analysis of the results, and recommendations for prevention and intervention. The report was presented at the World Conference on Noncommunicable Diseases in Geneva, Switzerland, in 2002. The report was also distributed to the public and to relevant stakeholders in order to raise awareness of the issue of violence and to encourage action to prevent and fight violence.

The report is based on a comprehensive analysis of the literature on violence and health. It includes an introduction to the concept of violence, a review of the various types of violence, and a discussion of the impact of violence on individuals, families, communities, and society. The report also includes a section on prevention and intervention, with recommendations for policies, programs, and services. The report concludes with a call to action, urging the international community to take decisive action to prevent and fight violence and to ensure the well-being of all people.
